

Abstract

The present invention relates to membrane binding diastereomeric peptides comprising amino acid sequences corresponding to a fragment of a transmembrane proteins, wherein at least two amino acid residues of the diastereomeric peptides being in a D-isomer configuration. The diastereomeric peptides are useful in inhibiting fusion membrane protein events, including specifically viral replication and transmission.